Happy New Year! I hope you have fabulous plans for the coming year. As you read this, I am just finishing a sojourn to Machu Picchu and The Galapagos – I'll have a lot to tell in next month's newsletter.

When I think of New Year, I place special emphasis on the Chinese New Year. The Chinese calendar is often referred to as a Solar/Lunar calendar because it includes two calendar methodologies. The Chinese Lunar New Year is the time when you will find many family celebrations in China – and in your local Chinatown. This date is determined by the first day of the first moon in the lunar calendar, which falls on different dates each year. In 2006, it falls on January 29th. It's considered an auspicious date, so begin your year with a clean home, the honoring of family and ancestors, celebrations with food, and candy and gifts in special red envelopes to bring good luck. The Solar New Year is used in Chinese Astrological calculations, such as the Four Pillars Analysis. This year it falls on February 4th. The Solar New Year is a slightly more "Westernized" holiday than the Lunar New Year.

I'm pleased to announce that I will be a featured columnist in a bi-monthly newsletter from Steiner Leisure Ltd. You can sign up to receive the newsletter by visiting www.timetospa.com. Those of you who have known me for a while may recall that I began my Steiner relationship by providing Feng Shui consulting for its spas onboard the Crystal Cruise Lines Harmony and Symphony Ships several years ago.

I look forward to seeing my Florida friends when I visit South Florida next month. Wishing you many fortunate blessings in the coming year.

With peace,

Carol Cannon

Honor The Land You Build On

Prior to beginning construction or renovation of a building, honor the land on which you plan to build. A traditional Feng Shui custom is to bless the land, thanking it for allowing you to disturb its energy. This is also a time to ask for its blessings, and for the necessary knowledge, finances, partners and people to help and support the construction process. Working in harmony with the earth will allow the project to flow with ease.

January's Color: Purple

Long associated with royalty, the color purple is linked to creating wealth. The “Wealth” Corner of a home or room is the SE corner, or, using the western method of Feng Shui, the far, left corner when standing at the main entrance of a house or room. Many of my clients have enjoyed painting this space purple, or adding a touch of purple through accessories. Doing this can open up the flow of positive chi, developing opportunities for you to create wealth in this area. My best wishes for your expansive prosperity in this coming year!

Consider adding a beautiful purple Swarovski crystal fan pull to your wealth corner. Learn more.

4-Pillars Analysis

Do you know which colors, shapes and elements are best for you and your family? For a fresh start this New Year, gather this information to help you move through the future with greater support. Based on your birth time, date and location, your personal Four Pillars Analysis will give you new insights, upcoming "luck" information and tailored guidance to make the most of opportunities in the coming year and beyond.
